In brandy
there's freedom and courage!

In wine lies wisdom and truth!

Right.
In water I see only tadpoles
and frogs...

The place where the Inn of Manuc was built had been part of the former Royal Palace, whose land was sold in auctions in the final years of 18th century. There is no information on how Manuc came to buy this place. It could be that the legal restriction forbidding foreigners to buy properties in Bucharest was not applied to Manuc Bey as gratitude for his success in deflecting the army of Manav Ibrahim from the Capital and saving the city and the noblemen.

The Inn, Manuc had started to build, was different from the great citadel-inns from the 18th century. A new form, less severe and more attractive, where the part of construction facing the interior yard was made of wood, with carved arched galleries, arrived at through monumental large stairs, with stucco ornaments above doors and windows and wooden pillars.

The basement sheltered 15 arched cellars; the ground-floor fostered 23 shops, 2 large halls, 10 warehouses, 16 rooms for servants and cooks and tunnel that could fit 500 people; 107 rooms and lodgings were on the top floor.

In the middle of the yard, paved with river stones, there was a café with all its outbuildings and a garden with a water fountain. On the Dambovitza banks, 16 or 20 additional shops were built for the Meat Hall.

The Inn of Manuc, ready to welcome its guests since the spring of 1808, started its story very well. Under its master's supervision, it fostered Russian and Turkish officials for 5 months. They concluded the Peace of Bucharest which ended a 6-year war.

In the period after 1810 up to 1830, the newest and most organized inn of Bucharest, it welcomed the most distinguished foreign travelers. After the death of Manuc Bey and his wife, under the leadership of interested and unskilled trustees, the inn lost its fame very quickly. We find out what the Inn of Manuc was around 1860 from the French painter August Lancelor, who visited Bucharest in that period:

„As it is now, it is the meeting place of Transylvanian coachmen, German drummers, petty Turkish, Bulgarian and Greek peddlers, of all poor travelers and nameless people who do not enjoy the light of day.

The galleries faced by the inn's rooms serve as walking alley and common halls. An unseen carelessness and shyness reign there. In front of everyone's eyes (...) everybody feels at home. From where I sat to draw my sketches, I could see a blonde German girl washing some rags (...), a barber razing chins and necks, a gypsy woman dancing before some drunken Turks, a comedian in a faded shirt teaching a ragged monkey some tricks. At the same time, I could hear behind my back the noise of a lute, accompanying a melancholic and sweet voice.

The strange yard showed the funniest and most varied view in the world: camp, warehouse, fair, stock-exchange, zoo – all at the same time; along the walls – tents, cases, tilts, bales of merchandise and, in the back large niches, closed with bars, stacks of fresh hides, wet wool, ox meat...

In this clutter, an endless movement of coaches, peasants on horses, women with bags, unharnessed horses that agitate, neigh and throw their hind legs, whining dogs, big black pigs that honk with pleasure...

This movement, this noise do not bother at all the Turks, Romanians, Bulgarians, Greeks who handled their business peacefully, discussing, bargaining under the supervision of Jews who changed their money on the spot, armed with big round glasses, with stones to check the gold, with scales..."

Șarba is a rare local grape an raising a glass of Romanian wine is customary at Hanul Manuc. So, as we say 'round here,... "dip your lip, then sip and sip; then get a grip so you won't trip." The classic Odobești Șarba actually descends from the Romanian Tămâioasă grape, only Șarba lui Manuc really stands apart. It has replaced the rose, basil and linden tree notes common to the usual Șarba with citrus ones-mainly lime and grapefruit. But the result is so balanced – and this is not an empty boast- than it actually can be paired with any kind of meat, not just poultry or fish. A surprising wine that you absolutely have to discover.

Beer connoisseurs will discover in Manuc's House Beer something rare and forgotten – the secret of good and settled taste, patience of the malt while fermenting, patience of the beer mug being iced, the lad's patience when pouring it into the glass leaving two fingers of snow white foam behind. Out of this patience comes your impatience, dear guest, to thirstily taste this noble liquid.
